FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

FACULTY ARTIST 'INTO THE DEEP' AT CSUSB ART MUSEUM

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. — Where do I begin and you end? What constitutes the space between us? Artist Annie Buckley is most interested in what we don't know — and how we seek to understand the indescribable experience of being.

“Annie Buckley: Into the Deep” will be on display at RAFFMA, the CSUSB art museum, May 17-July 31, 2012. A reception will be held on June 15 from 6-9 p.m. at the museum.

Buckley’s exhibit includes digital photographic collages and mixed media pieces spanning nearly a decade. Her work is informed by her practice in meditation and exploration of the intersections between ancient Indian and contemporary postmodern philosophies, specifically regarding the meaning and dimensions of consciousness.

As a visual artist and writer, Buckley works on one project or body of work at a time. “Hybrids” (2007-2008), is comprised of eight large-scale photographic collages of women morphing into trees, two of which are included in this exhibition. These imaginary portraits suggest characters for contemporary mythology and provoke questions about subject and object, figure and ground, prompting viewers to reconsider their relationship to the natural world.

“Mutations” (2003-2006), three photographic collages of iconic mythical females, are constructed of hundreds of photographs of the artist’s own body. The results resemble stained glass or psychedelia more than a human form, reflecting an experiential view of the body and continuity between integration and disintegration.

Also included in this exhibition will be selected works from Buckley’s most recently completed project, “Love Stories.” This work includes poems made from letters cut out of photographs of the sky. The artist uses all the possible endings to the phrase, “They met, fell in love...” creating whole love stories in as few words as possible.
